LEGO ERGO SUM (Tematska izjava)

Čitanje kao aktivnost inherentno je grafičkom dizajnu. Njihov uzajamni odnos je, međutim, složen. Ne samo da možemo govoriti o odnosu teksta i njegovog grafičkog oblikovanja već i o drugim formama grafičkog dizajna koje jednako tako „čitamo“, „iščitavamo“ i u koje „učitavamo“. Polazna tačka kada se razmišlja o dizajnu i čitanju mogu biti i opštija pitanja: Šta, gdje i kako čitamo? Kako kodiramo i dekodiramo značenje? Kako grafičko oblikovanje sadržaja donosi novi sloj značenja?

Čitanje možemo posmatrati kao kreativan čin kroz koji dolazi do rekontekstualizacije sadržaja. Unutar dizajna moramo razmišljati o čitanju kao metodi širenja znanja i razvijati taktike čitanja. Grafički/a dizajner/ka mora osvijestiti svoju ulogu u interpretaciji i redefinisaju informacija. Samo prenošenje riječi u vizuelnu formu rezultira dodatnim ili novim značenjem, bilo da iza toga stoji intencija (dizajnera/ke), bilo da je to samo posljedica tehnološkog ili stilskog konteksta iz kojeg proizilazi. Semantička komplementarnost forme (dizajna) i sadržaja (teksta) je jedna od fundamentalnih paradigmi grafičkog dizajna – od dizajnerskih stilova fin de siècle, preko Bauhauasa i modernističkih plakata, do emotikona ili mimova.

Međutim i ova relacija – kao i svaka druga – evoluirala. Šta se sa njom dešava kada se i sam odnos prema kulturi čitanja radikalno mijenja? Kako hiperprodukcija informacija, displej kultura, fragmentirana stvarnost i niz drugih fenomena umreženog društva podrivaju tradicionalnu kulturu čitanja, mijenjaju obrasce i modele odnosa prema tekstu? Kako grafički dizajn utiče / reaguje / doprinosi / oponira ovim trendovima? Kako savremeni prostori i relacije utiču na područje tipografije? Kako će izgledati budućnost izdavaštva uz trenutno stanje koje govori da su formati sa avangardnom i transgresivnom prošlošću – poput mini-edicija, nezavisnih umjetničkih časopisa, eksperimentalnih DIY publikacija, fanzina, asemičnih žurnala – življi i raznovrsniji nego ikad?

LEGO ERGO SUM (Statement)

The act of reading is inherent to graphic design, and it is a complicated relationship. We can think about the text's design (typographic properties) or about various forms of graphic design that we "read" or "read into". When thinking about this relationship, a starting point can be broad questions: What, where and how do we read? How do we encode and decode meaning? How does the graphic design of content bring a new layer of meaning?

We can consider reading a creative activity that interprets and recontextualises information and as a critical dissemination method within design education. The graphic designer must be aware of their role in shaping and communicating information. Transferring a word into a visual form results in additional or new meaning, whether it is the designer's intention (or whether it is only a consequence of the technological or stylistic context from which it arises). The semantic complementarity of the form (design) and content (text) is one of the fundamental paradigms of graphic design – from fin de siècle design styles, through Bauhaus and modernist posters, to emoticons or memes.

This relationship – like any other – is evolving. Attitudes towards reading culture are changing radically – how does this impact this relationship? How does hyperproduction of information, display culture, fragmented reality, and a networked society undermine the traditional reading culture? And does this change the patterns and attitudes towards reading? In what ways does graphic design influence / react / contribute / oppose to these trends? How do modern spaces and relations affect the field of typography? What will the future of publishing look like when formats with an avant-garde and transgressive past (mini-editions, independent art magazines, experimental DIY publications, fanzines, magazines) are livelier and more diverse than ever?
